Belected Poetru.

TRANSLATIONS PROM THE CHINESE.

BY DR. BOWRING. I see white biassoms duncing in the breeze, And all around is bright and fair as these: I dream my dreams beneath that flowery tree, As dream Bho Chong; and, like the bard Fuh Yih, Make my own upitah in melody: Stretch out thise hand, and let me welcome thee; So that when chunticlear probabilist the mora, And when the fresh gales agitate the thoro, And when the rain-drops patter on the ground, With three my lips may talk, with thee my heart be found.

Then wert to me like an exalted hill, On which I looked admiring, wordering still, And while I looked, my way seemed straight olear,
And thou my guide. Thou wert a garden there,
All blowling in full beauty—and it moved.
Like a hences floating cloud—actored and loved.
Were I but a poor altruh, a senseless free,
I would be thine, and lose myself in these.

Oh, I had seen the power of elequence!
I heard the grave discourse; heard, many tests,
fell, and the discord consed, and they embraced.
The strife was over; for the enge's lips
Dropped words of numbs, while his dager shock
The harmschourds sweet strings and they recalled.
The spring times gettleines, the blossiting trees
Which holy men had planted, and the cheuis.
And wrangings of the combatants were stilled.

The noblest entional lyric is generally conseded to Draho's "Amorican Fing." Here is a lyric by Holmes, without its faults, and equaling its beauties. It was written at the time when some Goth's prope ion to break up the brave old frigate Constituti was started, and is worthy of its subject. The last nangespecially, has a force and power which we have never seen excelled:

Ay, tear her tattered ensign down, tong has it waved on high And many an eye has danced to see That basser is the sky.

Beneath it rung the battle shout, And burst the cale of the recent air.

Shall sweep the clouds no more!

Her deck, once red with hereast blood,
Where knell the variguished for,
When which were harrying of rike flood,
And waves were white below.
No more shall feel the victor's tread,
the best the manufacted Rame—
The intribus of the above shall plack
The engle of the seal.

Out better that her shattered hulk should simi beneath the wave. Har thinders shock the mighty deep, And there should be her grave; Nail to the must her holy flur, So way, threat large oil. Set ever, thread bare sail, And give for to the god of storms, The lightning and the gale?

: FROM RUSSIA TO PEKIN.

A French traveler communicates to the North China Herald a rambling account of a land trip from the Russian frontier to the city of Pekin, in China, which furnishes some interesting, though not altogether satisfactory information, concerning that region of country, and the great Chinese Capital. The writer selected Kinkta, which lies due south from Lake Baikal, in Russia, for his wint of departure, instead of Nerting in hurricanes, while during the short summer the heat is quite African, and the sand storms will tear the skin off and blind the traveler. Of the way thenceforward to the Imperial city, and of the city itself, we have the following animated sketch:

At the frontier of China proper, 900 miles from Kiakta, the desert stops short in such an extraordinary manner as to make this one of the most remarkable spots on the earth. After a gradual ascent of 2000 feet from Urga, it is sudtown of Ciouan Hua-fou, called "Callgan" within her limits?
